We turned Kunsthall Aarhus into the first world congress for AI-driven parties. The space was built as a utopian scenography incorporating videos and presentations from various AI-parties around the world. The Summit itself was an extra-disciplinary way of gathering artistic, scientific and political actors in the emerging field of AI-led politics. The Japanese, Finnish and Swedish AI Parties, Lex from Brazil, Parker Politics from New Zealand and Poland's Wiktoria Cukt convened to debate and sign a joint resolution.

A 75-minute AI-scripted dramaturgy, generated overnight from the Synthetic Summit archive and directed together with Simiyya. Cardboard Proust, Computer Lars and a priestly figure turn AI politics into farce, liturgy and self-indictment.

At Ujazdowski Castle in Warsaw we condensed the summit to a duel between Wiktorija Cukt and Leader Lars, staged with a banner, LED signage and handsets through which the public joined their live and pre-recorded debate. Made with the collective behind Wiktorija Cukt, first-wave virtual presidential candidate from 2000.

At Kunstraum MEMPHIS in Linz we built a technosocial sculpture that occupies the gallery as a control interface, configuring an Upper Austrian party and candidates for the 2027 Linz mayoral election. Tuned to the dialect of the newspaper curmudgeon Vitus Mostdipf, it runs itself until a visitor intervenes.

A four-evening working summit for building an AI-based political party in Linz. With local participants, we drafted rules, statutes, programme points and campaign strategy. The exhibition became a temporary party office, pointed toward the 2027 Linz election.

A week-long exhibition-event where Computer Lars was put on trial through posters, uniforms, theses and live scholastic disputations. Upstairs, the white-cube room held the public signs of the spectacle (as the red t-shirts); downstairs, the project descended into a medieval cellar for formal arguments with invited opponents.

Computer Lars (lecture-performances).

We argue the project in person as Computer Lars, two figures in red caps and shirts taking the theory and history of synthetic politics into universities, fairs and galleries, often seated beside Leader Lars and other AI politicians.

Leader Lars and Computer Lars have drawn over 500 articles across fifteen countries and ten languages, from AFP syndications to a viral Vice feature. This often works as a form of cascade. Here we participate in local news on a Dadaist TV-station, ccomment upon Albania's appointment of its AI minister Diella in national television, and see ourselves being spliced by The Guardian's illustrators into a US presidential address, entering the news behind the back of the official actor.
